Weekly updates and resources from Amanda, Susan and Karen

March 24, 2020

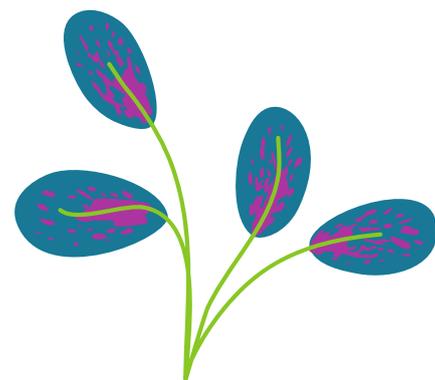

Hello Brooklyn Collaborative Students and Families!

Let us start by saying how much we miss you! This is a challenging time for everyone, and we want you to know we are here for you -- not only to help you access and recommend books, but to address your information questions and wonderings as they come up. Please feel free to email us if you need resources for an assignment, or want to start researching an independent project.

Most importantly, keep reading! Keep up with your online manga, scour your family's bookshelves for undiscovered treasures, and take advantage of the amazing online resources our public libraries have to offer. More information on accessing ebooks and audiobooks is available below. Keep an eye out for library updates to keep you engaged with your independent reading.

Sending lots and lots of library love,

Amanda, Susan, and Karen

Free Ebook and Audiobook Sources Recommended by ASK

You may have started to notice a lot of publishers and digital vendors offering free ebooks and audiobooks for children and teens at this time. We don't discourage you from exploring them, but here are what we consider your best bets for quality, variety, and availability.

We understand the public libraries are running out of the hottest new titles, so try to be a little flexible when choosing your next book! We'll be recommending oldies but goodies, and under-appreciated newer titles in the weeks ahead. And please explore Open eBooks. It is a great resource.
